10:00AM – 10:45AM B1: South Carolina State Historical Records Advisory Board (SC SHRAB) Update
JESSICA HILLS, SC Department of Archives & History
BRENDA BURK, Clemson University

SESSION DESCRIPTION

South Carolina SHRAB was very active in the 1980s and 1990s, but it has been defunct for the past several years. The SC SHRAB was revived in 2019 and the National Historical Publications and Records Commission (NHPRC) recently awarded the Board a small grant to conduct a survey of historical repositories across the state. The purpose of this survey is to update the state's Strategic Goals for Historical Records and create a plan to address historical records issues in South Carolina. This presentation will allow the Board to update others in the state about the work the Board is doing to bring the SHRAB back to its previous levels of assistance.

SCAA 2020 Virtual Annual Meeting Program

MORNING PRESENTATIONS

11:00AM – 11:45AM C1: "Managing an Archives These Days"

BRENDA BURK, Clemson University

BETH BILDERBACK, South Caroliniana Library

SESSION DESCRIPTION

The year 2020 proved to be a challenging year with the pandemic. In March, many of us switched to Work From Home and now are in the Return to Work phase. The health and welfare of our archivists and researchers are everyone's top work priority. So how are South Carolina archivists responding? What can we learn from each other as we navigate these chaotic times? After presenting a couple of cases, this session will be an open discussion about concerns, ideas, and solutions.

"Editing History: A Virtual Wikipedia Edit-A-Thon as Archival Outreach"

CATHERINE STIERS AND REBECCA THAYER, College of Charleston

DESCRIPTION

How can archival institutions increase opportunities for the public to engage with collections when physical access is not possible? From July 13th-17th, 2020, Special Collections and the South Carolina LGBTQ Archive at the College of

SCAA 2020 Virtual Annual Meeting Program

Charleston hosted a virtual LGBTQ Wikipedia Edit-a-thon. Although Wikipedia is a popular starting point for researchers of all levels, it suffers from significant content gaps regarding LGBTQ entries. Events like the edit-a-thon strive to address these discrepancies using crowdsourcing with support from archival resources.

Virtual events lower barriers of accessibility and allow passive learners to become active participants, synthesizing and disseminating historical knowledge. Archival and memory workers play a vital role in this transition by providing primary and secondary sources as well as technical support for novice researchers. Because Wikipedia is so popular, the quality of an article can be seen as a correlation to its importance. If an inexperienced researcher does not find a Wikipedia entry for a topic, they may falsely assume it is insignificant. These gaps are not because missing topics are unimportant, but are the result of inherent representational biases.

This presentation will explore the challenges and benefits of conducting a virtual event as well as the impact of inaccurate or under-researched articles. We will also analyze Wikipedia's policy of requiring published secondary sources, how it impacts the use of archives on Wikipedia, and the potential inequity for people and organizations from marginalized groups. Finally, we will share the potential for similar events in the future.

"Netflix and Shoes: Embracing the Side Hustle"

BROOKE FOX, MUSC Waring Historical Library

DESCRIPTION

In this lightening talk I will discuss how the Waring Historical Library earned extra money in 2019 by serving as a site for two location shoots: 1) Sperry Shoes' Fall 2019 advertising campaign and 2) the new Netflix show, "Outer Banks," about "a group of teenagers from the wrong side of the tracks [who] stumble upon a treasure map that unearths a long-buried secret." I will discuss how these two shoots came to use the Waring, as well as preparing the library, working with the film crews, and positives and negatives of participating. My presentation will include images I took during both shoots as well as the professional final products (website and video).

E1: “Documenting Life during the COVID-19 Pandemic: The MUSC COVID-19 Archive Project”

TABITHA SAMUEL, Waring Historical Library (MUSC)

SESSION DESCRIPTION

The COVID-19 pandemic has placed archives and special collections at academic medical centers in a unique position at the forefront of collecting during this health crisis. In an effort to collect personal reflections of those living in South Carolina and to chronicle the efforts of the Medical University of South Carolina (MUSC) during the pandemic, the Waring Historical Library developed The MUSC COVID-19 Archive: Documenting Life During the COVID-19 Pandemic. This presentation will delve into the development of The MUSC COVID-19 Archive, the project’s timeline and online platform, challenges, and future plans for developing the COVID-19 collection within the digital archive.

E2: “From Challenge to Opportunity: A Tale of Two Transcription Projects”

KRISTA OLDHAM AND JAMES CROSS, Clemson University

SESSION DESCRIPTION

The pandemic known as COVID-19 forced Clemson University to transition to online instruction and institute work from home for many faculty and staff. This transition presented Clemson’s libraries with the challenge of how to provide meaningful work for library employees whose work is not conducive to working from home and in an online environment. Special Collections and Archives took on this challenge and developed two robust transcription projects that not only sought to provide library employees with work and a better understanding about the archives and the work we do, but also to make our collections more discoverable and accessible to future researchers. In the process of transforming the challenge into an opportunity, library employees, including students, are now acquiring paleographical and linguistic skills; working directly with archival documents and oral histories; and ultimately engaging in a collaborative project that spans across library units. This session will describe the collections being transcribed; the project planning process; the tools used for onboarding, project management, and communication; and lessons learned.

F1: “Remote Digital Preservation Peer Assessment: Collaboratively Facing Digital Preservation Obstacles”

SEAN FERGUSON, NEDCC (Northeast Document Conservation Center)

SESSION DESCRIPTION:

Digital preservation programs benefit from assessments that identify strengths and weaknesses and recommend a course of action for improvement. In times of social distancing, it may not be possible to have a consultant or peer safely visit your site in person to conduct such an assessment. This session presents a model for assessing a peer institution’s digital preservation program remotely.

Participants will learn about a comprehensive assessment framework and understand special considerations for gathering information remotely instead of onsite. The presenter will share a published guide to conducting a digital preservation peer assessment to help attendees begin planning their own assessment with a peer.

G2: "SC Is So Gay! Documenting SC LGBTQ Communities"

HARLAN GREENE, BRANDON REID, AND REBECCA THAYER, College of Charleston

SESSION DESCRIPTION:

Most SC archives have failed to document the LGBTQ community and the role it has played in the state; in 2018, with grant funds, archivists at the College of Charleston began a project of collecting materials and doing oral histories. In this presentation, staff will discuss the project, note lessons learned, and address a number of related issues – such as how a “historical” program helped changed the culture at the host institution and how the project has adapted to diminishing funds and operating in a pandemic. The presentation will end with a call for the creation of a network across the state to continue outreach to, and documentation of, LGBTQ communities. The SC LGBTQ Oral History, Archives and Outreach Program at the College of Charleston is dedicated to this mission.
